THE DUCK FARMS OF CHINA. An Every-Day Sight to Surprise an American Poultryman.

We expected to see something wonderfully fine when we came to Soo-chow; for does not the ancient proverb read, "Above are the halls of heaven; below are Soochow and Hang-chow?" But we only saw what afterward seemed to us a typical Chinese city, and it is not to the cities that I would especially recommend sightseers to go. The fame and splendor of a Chinese city lie not upon its being any cleaner than others, or upon its having wider streets, but upon the wealth of its merchants, the number of its pagudas, the gorgeousness of its temples, the beauty of its tea-gardens and the like. Thus Soo-chow is great, and its women are called the belies of the world. There the floating duck farms and the multitudes of river craft interested us most. In a quiet reach of water beside the walls we saw many flocks of ducks, each containing five nundred to a thousand birds. The shores were covered, and the water was alive with them. The herders sat idly in small boats, while the ducks swam freely about, each flock making a great tremulous brown spot upon the water. We watched to see one flock join another, and to discover how the owners would separate them afterward, but they did not join forces, and I doubt whether they ever would. The drakes led their followers away whenever two herds came too near. On another day, near Soc-chow, we saw a duck farm bigger than all these put together. What would the reader think of seeing a farmer traveling to market with as many ducks as could be crowded into more than the space of the park between the City Hall and the postoffice in New York city—a mass of perhaps two city blocks of duck flesh and feathers? That was what was driven past us on the Grand canal one day. Two men in two boats were driving the ducks before them, all as thick upon the water as they could swim. Each man carried a long slender bamboo rod with the heart of a palm leaf on the end of it. With this he kept the red and gray squawking mass in order. He whipped back into its place every duck that sagged out of the mass, or that lagged behind, or showed a disposi-tion to make for the shore. Suddenly several boats came along in the opposite direction—a big chop-boat and two or three smaller vessels. They were sailing swiftly before a fresh breeze directly down upon the acre or two of Aucks. There home, in Woodruff Place.

in it opened before the chop-boat, and widened until the boat swept through a canal that divided the flock. Not one duck was run over.

WOMEN RIDING ASTRIDE. Riding Master Believes the Innova-

Buffalo Express. Since the appearance on one of our avenues, a few days ago, of a woman riding a horse astride there has been the usual discussion attending any innovation in Buffalo. Investigation at the local riding schools proves that there are a number of society girls taking up this new fad, which of course it is at the present time. Whether or not it has come to stay remains to be

People who know very little about riding are under the impression that the crosswise riding for women is not so dangerous. Harold St. John, a local riding master, is authority for the statement that riding astride is much more dangerous than the way women have been accustomed to ride in the past, and explains it in the following way: ing way:

"A woman has more of a grip in the side saddle than in a man's saddle," he said, yesterday morning. "A man wouldn't have for the reason that from the hips down a man has more weight than a woman. A woman's weight is mostly from the hips up. So the weight that would keep a man from heing thrown in an emergency wouldn't be being thrown in an emergency wouldn't be of the slightest use for a woman. Then, too, from the hips down to the knees a man's leg is longer, consequently he can clinch the side of the horse and keep from being thrown in this way, while a woman couldn't, as the horse slants where her knee would come. Of course, a good rider doesn't ride his horse by his grip, but by balance, but when an emergency comes and the horse is frightened and jumps, some sort of grip is necessary, and the woman will find her best grip on her side saddle.
"A woman will have to be a much more skillful rider to ride astride than the other way. The reason it has been so successfully tried in New York and other cities is because only women accustomed all their lives to equestrian exercises are taking it up. You let a beginner try it and see the

"For myself, I have no objection to it, only I know that it is nonsense for so many people to say that riding astride is a safer way of riding. One reason people have come to believe the old way not safe is because if a woman is ever hurt riding, the fact is published all over the country, while among the same number of men more are injured, only nothing is said about it. Anyway, even though you hear of women being hurt, you never hear of men being injured.

"Then, again, you hear about the twisted osition. Well, I have no doubt but that the crosswise position is more comfortable, but we have never heard of a woman being deformed through riding as has always "As to the grace? Well, that is entirely a matter of training the eye. If it were customary for women to ride in a new way, it would look just as graceful to us. A woman sits astride much straighter than

HAPPY ANSWERS.

Men Whose Wit Has Served a Good Purpose in Emergencies. San Francisco Chronicle.

"That is not wit which consists not with wisdom," says the wittiest and wisest writer in our language, and not a little of the necessary wisdom consists in the timely application of wit itself. A pretty long list night be made of men who have cwed their advancement in life to a smart answer given at the right moment. One of Naoleon's veterans, who survived his master many years, was wont to recount with great glee how he once picked up the Emperor's cocked hat at a review, when the latter, not noticing that he was one of the privates of the guard of honor, said care-lessly: "Thank you, captain," "In what regiment, sire?" instantly asked the ready-witted soldier. "In my guard," responded Napoleon, perceiving his mistake, for I see you know how to be prompt."

A somewhat similar anecdote is related of Marshal Suvoroff, who, when receiving a dispatch from the hands of a Russian ser-geant who had greatly distinguished himself on the Danube attempted to confuse the messenger by a series of whimsical questions, but found him as ready witted as he had proved himself to be brave. "How many fish are there in the sea?" asked Suvoroff. "All that are not yet caught," was the answer. "How far is it to the moon?" "Two of your excellency's forced marches." "What would you do if you saw your men giving way in battle?" "I'd tell them that there was a wagon load of whisky just behind the enemy's line." Baffled at all points the marshal ended with: "What's the difference between your colonel and myself?" "My tween your colonel and myself?" "My colonel cannot make me a lieutenant, but your excellency has only to say the word."

"I say it right now, then," answered Suvoroff, "and a right good officer you'll be." In both cases the newly-made officers received the promised commissions. The traditions of the English navy have preserved another instance of the kind well worth quoting. When the duke of Clar-ence, afterward William Henry IV, went down to Portsmouth to inspect the British Seventy-fours, the guide allotted to him was a battered old lieutenant with one eye, who, lacking a "friend at court," had served for years without promotion. As the veteran removed his hat to salute the guests of Miss Howe, on Central avenue, royal visitor the latter remarked his baldness and said jestingly, "I see, my friend, you have not spared your hair in your country's service." "Why, your royal high-ness," answered the old salt, "so many young fellows have stepped over my head that it's a wonder I have any hair left.' The duke laughed heartily at this profes sional joke, but he made a note of the old man's name at the same time, and a few days after the latter was agreeably surprised to receive his appointment as cap-

PRINCES IN RUSSIA.

The Woods Are Full of Them and So Are the Fields.

The club will meet monly to be met with—in fiction—that it sessing a genuine right to the title who are content to remain in their own country and earn an honest living in various humole capacities. Recent investigations prove that in the larger cities, including Petersburg and Moscow, there are any num-ber of princely and noble lackeys, wait-ers—even porters and "boots" in hotels and restaurants who are not above performing menial duties, or accepting tips for their services. The Tartars, who may be seen any day hawking lamps about the streets are, for the most part, of prince-ly descent, and it is small wonder that the title of "kniaz" (prince) is not held in particular respect in Russia, unless backed by substantial advantages of wealth and assured position. In the south and east provinces princes are constantly to be met with following the calling of shep-herds, farm laborers, drovers, etc. The village of Abzanowka alone can boast of harboring 127 members of the princely family of Sakagen, the claims of whom are fully acknowledged by the Russian College of Heralds in St. Petersburg. This is by no means an exceptional instance. and there are many other tiny hamlets where equally large and ever-increasing onies of nobles and princes are to be

The Deceitful Summer Girl.

The general utility reporter says the summer girl is a hopeless liar. The other day while down the river he met one of the dashing, brown-eyed kind. He hadn't been talking with her five minutes before she gave him a fictitious name, said she had just returned from a trip to Europe, and was well acquainted with everybody on Delaware avenue. He gulped it all and thought he had the swellest girl at the resort. When he got back to the city he may a fellow who told him he had seen hi with the summer girl. Of course the reporter was inquisitive and wanted to know all about her. He learned that all she had told him was false and that she was a gaudy little butterfly from the tenement nouse district. The Wheel a Test of Character. Arsene Alexandre, in Scribner.

Certain disgruntled philosophers have contended that the woman you see is seldom the woman you think you see. Mounted upon her blcycle, most women have to tell the truth about themselves. One can distinguish at a glance the daring, willful beauty from the timid, tender girl. The woman is reduced for the moment to the plane of a boy, whose good looks or lack of them, health, vigor of mind and body, are apparent. I will even go so far as to advise a man not to get married until he has seen the object of his choice disport herself upon a bicycle.
